Barbados Government awards contract to Battlefield Sports to boost Cadet Recruitment

LOS ANGELES, CA., September 7th 2006: Battlefield Sports the world leading developer of combat simulation weaponry for commercial and military organizations today announced that it has been awarded a contract by Barbados Cadet Corps, the youth arm of the Barbados Defence Force.

Under the terms of the contract, Battlefield Sports will supply 45 high powered infrared guns to the Corps.

The purpose of the contract is to provide exciting and realistic training exercises for young Cadets in a safe and controlled environment.

All Battlefield Sports guns are equipped with integrated sensors attached with Velcro to military headwear. The guns also have integrated sensor detectors on the gun barrel.

The infrared guns fire harmless light pulses at sensors during simulated battles. These infrared "bullets" are used to simulate the direct-fire effects of each Cadet's engagements on the battlefield.

Battlefield Sports spent more than seven years developing, constructing, producing, installing, field-testing, integrating and conducting trials of its combat simulation systems.

"We believe the inclusion of this new equipment will encourage students to join the Cadet Corps and become involved in wholesome challenging outdoor activities," said Lt Col Trevor Browne, Commandant, Barbados Cadet Corps.

"This allows the Corps to simulate many of the training situations and challenges which we previously could only practice by 'pretending'," said Lt Col Browne.

"Challenges such as attacking and defending positions, patrols, ambushes etc will now be possible to test our training in weapons handling, field craft, camouflage etc," said Lt Col Browne.

"In addition, it is planned that units will establish 'crack' teams which will compete in interschool competition in a number of challenges," said Lt Col Browne.

Battlefield Sports will deliver its systems in November 2006.

"The Barbados government is a valued customer and we are looking towards a long term relationship. The awarding of this contract confirms their commitment to our
